

The Heroes of Bluffton

BY L. JON WERTHEIM

NBA: WARRIORS OUT OF NOWHERE P. 72
NFL DRAFT
JaMarcus Russell
THE ECSTASY
BY PETER KING
THE AGONY
BY RICK REILLY

Sports Illustrated

www.SI.com

MAY 7, 2007

★ DE LA HOYA vs. MAYWEATHER ★

The Fight to Save Boxing

BY RICHARD HOFFER

before Davis played 44 minutes in Game 4. "If he breaks down, he breaks down, and we go home. What am I waiting for?"

THROUGH IT all, Nelson has been the steady presence. When he arrived in Oakland last August, he announced that he was too old to worry about losing his job; he was going to tell it like it is. And he has. When most NBA coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal says Stackhouse. "He was around this organization forever. I think he's been able to instill in his team that they have a good chance of beating us, and they believe him."

Nelson's job is made easier because his Warriors are the quintessential nothing-to-lose, everything-to-prove team. Davis and Jackson are rehabbing reputations, Richardson is tasting the playoffs for the first time in his six-year career and Nelson

"This is as much fun as I've had coaching," says Nelson. "I'VE NEVER ENJOYED A YEAR more than this one."

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal

GETTING A JUMP A record crowd joined Davis (left) and Barnes in relishing Sunday's victory, which put Golden State up 3-1.

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal

coaches call a timeout, they first meet with their assistants briefly on the court, then address the team; Nelson just sits down and gives it to his players. At the start of the year he told the team's starting center, Adonal himself was considered washed up two years ago. Now? Davis is hearing M-V-P! chants, Jackson is lauded as a team leader, Richardson is hitting game-breaking threes, and Nelson is inspiring signs like the one Sunday that read NELLIE SMOKES CUBAN. "This is as much fun as I've had coaching," says Nelson. "I've never enjoyed a year more than this one."

Not since the Run TMC teams of the early '90s—coached by, of course, Nelson—have the Warriors been at the forefront of Bay Area sports. Perhaps it's fitting, then, that there is such a nostalgic feel to this run. Chris Mullin (the C of TMC) is now the team's executive VP of basketball operations, Mitch Richmond (the M) is a special assistant and Rod Higgins is the G.M. Late Sunday night they all crossed paths outside the locker room. There went Richmond, then Higgins, leaving Mullin and former teammate Tom Tolbert, who held a giant cup of beer and, in shorts and a backward hat, looked like a 6' 8" frat boy at the world's greatest kegger. Someone suggested it was a veritable Warriors reunion, to which Tolbert cracked, "It can't be a reunion without Chris Gatling."

No doubt Nelson would have appreciated the joke, but he was already gone. After the win he had walked off the court and down the tunnel, high-fiving fans as confetti colored his white hair, then grabbed his customary Bud Light, followed by his customary second Bud Light, which he brought with him to the podium for the press conference. There, as usual, he played the role of aw-shucks Midwestern coach and praised Dallas, asserting that he was just happy to be part of all this craziness. Then he retreated to his downtown Oakland apartment to revel with friends and have a cigar. It's safe to say that the man had earned it. □

